2

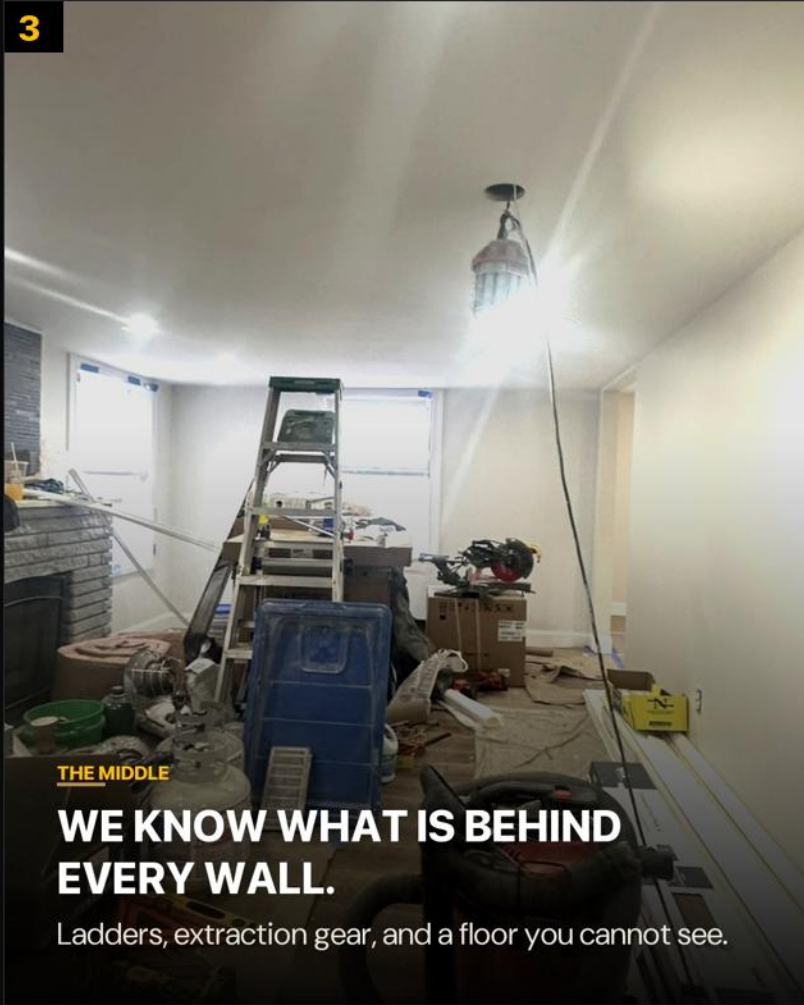

OPENING UP

WE LEARN THE HOUSE FROM THE INSIDE AND OUT.

Ceilings opened end to end before anything goes back.

3

THE MIDDLE

WE KNOW WHAT IS BEHIND EVERY WALL.

Ladders, extraction gear, and a floor you cannot see.

4

THE SAME ROOM

SO THE FAMILY WILL NEVER HAVE TO.

New floor, new paint, new light, and a restored fireplace.

5

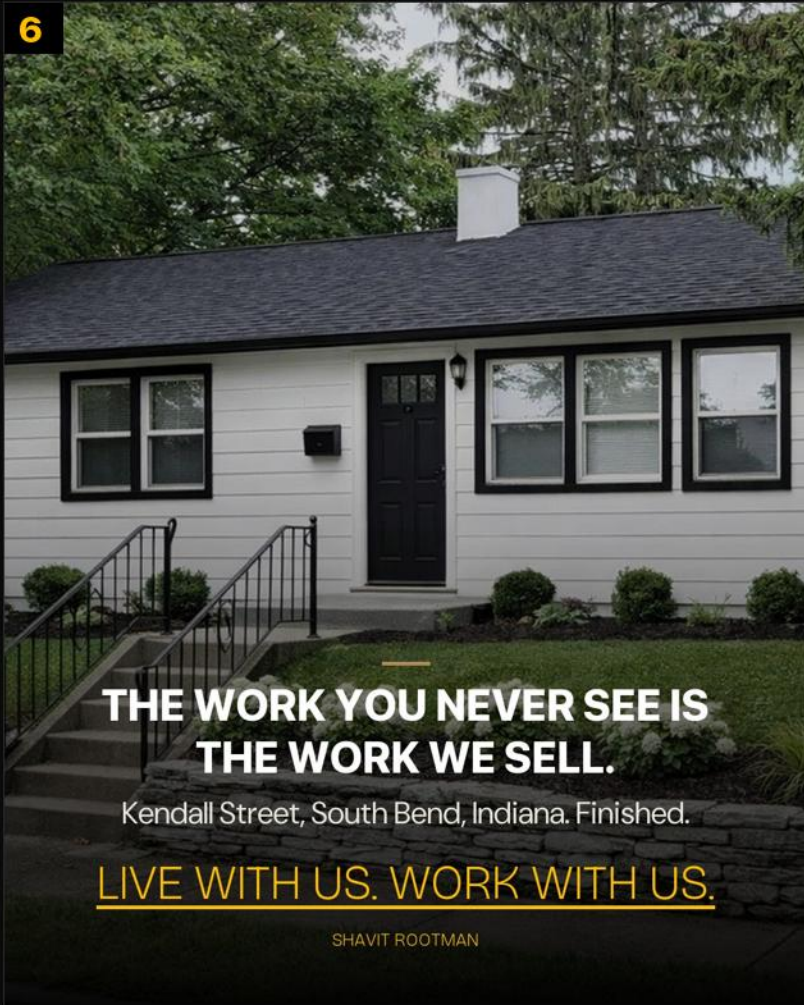

FINISHED

NEW FLOOR. NEW LIGHT. NEW KITCHEN.

A South Bend rebuild, finished top to bottom.

A photograph of a cluttered interior room, likely a basement or workshop, during a renovation project. The room features a large window on the left with plastic sheeting, a brick fireplace with a dark metal insert, and a wall with dark horizontal tiles above the mantel. The floor is covered with various items including buckets, a fan, a ladder, and other construction materials. The ceiling has recessed lighting.

CAPTION

Nobody posts this part.

This is what a renovation looks like for most of the time it is actually happening. Fans running, propane on the floor, a ceiling opened end to end. None of it is visible once the walls close, and all of it decides whether a family is warm in February and whether the house is still sound in ten years.

We know what is behind every wall in this house. The people who live here never have to.

Swipe to the fourth slide. You are standing in the same room as the first one.
